PROVIDENTIAL ESCAPE.

A prescription was prepared the other day, at a Main street apothocary's, by an inexperienced clerk, for a young lady residing on Fourth street, and sent home. Some thirty minutes after, the regular prescription clerk called, and was putting up the bottles, when he observed a jar of strychnine in the place of some harmless preparation, and called attention to it. The young man, who had put up the medicine, turned pale as death when the discovery was made, and said, "great God. I have just sent that to Mr. —, on Fourth street." Not a moment was to be lost, and indeed a great probability was that the poison had been already taken; but the clerk determining to make an effort, seized his hat and rushed frantically through the street, until he came to the house, and withmanner-but as he told her life and death depended upon his knewing immediately, she pointed to the door from which she had just issued. He entered unbidden, and just as the young lady's mother was about to administer one of the powders, which was prepared in a spoon, nearly at her daughter's "Hold for God's sake, Madam! That is poison! Give it to your daughter, and you are her murderes-!"

The wildness of the clerk's manner frightened both ladies-the spoon fell upon the bed, and the daughter's pallid cheek was bleached until it was as colorless as hernight

The druggist was thought to be insane, but 250 a few words of explanation revealed all, and 200 the tragedy was extinguished in the light of joy at the providential escape.

The druggist returned, and relieved the poor clerk from his awful suspense, by tell-100 ing him of the happy result of his errand, when the clerk swooned away. This little 80 sketch, though it may sound dramatically, is a simple transcript of an occurrence that exposes a climpse of the "inner life" of a drug store. - Cincinnati Enquirer.
